What does the 'electricity price package' mean for German companies?

Electricity prices remain at a high level, harming the competitiveness of German companies. The 'electricity price package' presented by the Federal Government is to offer additional relief to energy-intensive and manufacturing companies. A brief overview of the key points.

How will Germany's electricity price compensation work?

So far, this has applied for approx. 30,000 companies. A change concerning electricity price compensation is to provide additional relief to approx. 350 German companies facing very intense international competition. These will see their electricity providers reimburse them for up to 75% of the carbon price incorporated in the electricity price.

How will energy prices affect Germany's manufacturing sector?

With energy prices high and demand subdued, challenges for Germany's manufacturing sector – and its European partners – are set to persist. The surge in energy prices, which started at the end of 2021, has severely impacted the euro area manufacturing sector, the output of which has declined below its pre-pandemic level in late 2024 (Figure 1).

Why did Germany introduce a price brake in 2022?

In December 2022, Germany introduced a price brake for both gas and electricity as part of its €200 billion “protective shield”.
